Modern Slavery Awareness Training

Course Overview:

It is estimated that some 46 million people, about 0.5% of the global population today suffer some form of modern slavery. A heinous and often hidden crime, it includes slavery, servitude, forced and compulsory labour and human trafficking. The impact can be devastating for the victims.

This Modern Slavery Awareness training course has been developed for first responders and people who may come into contact with trafficking victims, including teachers, youth workers, local authorities, police officers, council workers, nurses and all hospital staff or anyone looking for more information on human trafficking and modern slavery.

This modern slavery training course will assist delegates identify the signs and fulfil a positive role in preventing this illegal and morally unacceptable practice.

Trainer:

Glyndwr Jones provides Modern Slavery Awareness Training, drawing on his extensive experience in specialist police roles focused on this issue. As a former Police Constable and Sergeant, he worked within specialist units investigating human trafficking and modern slavery crimes. This first-hand experience tackling these offenses helps inform his comprehensive understanding of modern slavery practices.

Glyndwr uses insights from real case studies and intelligence to illustrate key learning points during training. His background developing policing strategies to identify and safeguard victims of slavery strengthens his ability to advise organisations on effective safeguarding procedures.

Glyndwr's unique perspective from working within police specialist units allows him to deliver training that is grounded in practical, frontline experience of dealing with modern slavery. This lends greater impact when he educates businesses on spotting risks and responding appropriately.
