Modern Slavery & Gender Based Violence Training

Course Overview:

It is estimated that some 46 million people, about 0.5% of the global population today suffer some form of modern slavery. A heinous and often hidden crime, it includes slavery, servitude, forced and compulsory labour and human trafficking. The impact can be devastating for the victims.

This modern slavery and gender based violence training course will help delegates understand how to identify and report the signs and fulfil a positive role in preventing this illegal and morally unacceptable practice.

Trainer:

Glyndwr Jones provides Modern Slavery and Gender-Based Violence Awareness Training, drawing on his extensive experience in specialist police roles focused on these issues. As a former Police Constable and Sergeant, he worked within specialist units investigating human trafficking, modern slavery crimes and domestic violence.

This first-hand experience tackling these offenses helps inform his comprehensive understanding of modern slavery and gender-based violence practices. Glyndwr uses insights from real case studies and intelligence to illustrate key learning points during training.

His background developing policing strategies to identify and safeguard victims of slavery and domestic abuse strengthens his ability to advise organisations on effective safeguarding procedures.

Glyndwr's unique perspective from working within police specialist units allows him to deliver training grounded in practical, frontline experience of dealing with modern slavery and gender-based violence. This lends greater impact when he educates businesses on spotting risks and responding appropriately.
